• racial injustice in our world. Though it may not affect everyone, it can have big impacts on those who are affected. Personally I'm not faced with racial injustice, but I am able to clearly see it in the world we live in and who it affects.

Racial injustice is shown through everyday life unfortunately. While things have gotten a lot better there is still that lingering feeling. I don't know if there is racial injustice in the church or religion but God's kingdom and worship of him bring everyone together, no matter race, and we can forget the things that make us different and connect through God.

Racial injustice impacts everybody, not always directly. It has gotten better but still not as good as it needs to be. I agree with both of these two statements about on racial injustice.

I'm aware of the injustice that political leaders are having with immigrants. The way that these leaders want to take away the opportunity to get a better life even for immigrants with legal papers.

I agree, in the podcast we listened to for class. It talks about how there hasn't always been borders so stopping people from immigrating is new.

* Injustice: Just corrupt leaders who steal public funds thinking they're sneaky. And harassing/killing those who put it in the public eye *

3. Justice. Wright focuses quite a bit of energy elucidating the injustice of wealth distribution. What present injustice in the world are you most aware of?

I think the thing I see the most is racism. A lot of things play into the way that racism is present. Most of them are forms of injustice: slavery (think back to "The Case For Reparations"), financial inequality, living conditions. Overall many forms of injustice build and make racism worse. Another injustice in the world today is sexism. Even today in developed countries there are lingering effects, but more importantly in countries such as Afghanistan where women are mistreated and unable to do anything by themselves, and living in fear. Both of these injustices are still present today even though some might look back at history and believe them resolved. This is far from the truth. The injustices of racism and sexism must be worked on continuously.
